

Copyright

All of our websites are copyright the Mindfulness Network, or joint copyright with collaborators, except where we explicitly acknowledge the source and have permission to use the material. This covers the websites:

- Home.mindfulness-network.org
- Supervision.mindfulness-network.org
- Retreats.mindfulness-network.org
- Training.mindfulness-network.org
- Compassion.mindfulness-network.org
- Booking.mindfulness-network.org

Our mission is to make high-quality mindfulness material as widely available as possible. However, if you wish to use any of our material, we would ask you either to directly link to it or to obtain permission to use it from us.

You can read more about copyright law at www.gov.uk/copyright.

Breach of copyright is a potential legal issue, and plagiarism is an ethical issue. Copying without permission is a breach of copyright, and using our material without permission and acknowledgement could amount to plagiarism. As a charity, our intellectual property is our only substantial asset, and we would ask anyone wishing to use our material to respect our rights and behave ethically.

Likewise we wish to respect other parties' Intellectual Property, and if you notice that there is material on our website or in our services that you think are not properly attributed or have other issues, we would welcome you advising us so that we can investigate.

If you have any queries regarding the use of our material, or notice potential infringements of our copyright, or notice something you think we have done to breach others copyright, then email us at info@mindfulness-network.org.

